5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

MATT BURKE, SPORTS EDITOR

The massive Wynn Casino in Everett is set to open next June, and legal sports betting should follow soon after. We have an update on Page 8 and at Metro.us on the progress the sports-gambling industry has made since the Supreme Court declared it a state issue in May. Things are moving faster than most expected as Boston-based DraftKings just opened the first legal online sports book in New Jersey this week. It's not hard to envision online sports betting also becoming legal in Massachusetts by the end of next year.

1 COHEN UNDER INVESTIGATION FOR TAX FRAUD: WSJ

Federal prosecutors in New York are examining whether President Donald Trump's former lawyer Michael Cohen committed tax fraud in relation to his taxi-medallion business, The Wall Street Journal reported Tuesday. Cohen has not been charged with any crime. The Federal Bureau of Investigation seized documents and files as part of investigations by federal prosecutors in New York stemming from a referral by the U.S. special counsel's office, which is looking into possible coordination between Trump 2016 campaign aides and Russia. Moscow denies interfering in the U.S. election and Trump denies collusion by his campaign, describing the probe as a political witch hunt. Lanny Davis, an attorney for Cohen, said he couldn't comment. A spokesman for the U.S. attorney's office in Manhattan, which is handling the investigation, declined to comment. Federal authorities are assessing whether income from Cohen's taxi-medallion business was underreported in federal tax returns, according to the newspaper, citing one person familiar with the matter.

2 FORMER MLB PITCHER EXPECTED TO PLEAD GUILTY

Esteban Loaiza, a former pitcher who played for the Chicago White Sox and seven other teams, may plead guilty on Friday to cocaine trafficking charges at a U.S. District Court hearing in California, according to a court filing. Loaiza, 46, earlier this year pleaded not guilty to charges of possession with intent to sell cocaine, stemming from a February arrest in San Diego. Authorities found about 20 kilos (44 pounds) of cocaine in bags with his name on them, federal court records show. Loaiza's lawyer had requested that a trial scheduled to start on Friday be changed to a plea hearing for her client, the court records said. Defense attorney Janice Deaton offered no comment on Tuesday when reached by Reuters. A spokeswoman for San Diego federal prosecutors declined to discuss the potential plea deal, but said in an email that the statutory penalties for the current charge are mandatory minimum 10 years and maximum of life imprisonment. Loaiza, a journeyman who pitched for eight major league teams and most of them more than once between 1995 and 2008, was a two-time American League all star.

4 CHINA DENIES ENTRY TO WINNIE THE POOH FILM

Walt Disney Co.'s request to show "Christopher Robin," a movie that features the honey-loving bear Winnie the Pooh, has been denied by authorities in China, a source familiar with the matter said Tuesday. It is unclear why the Chinese government denied entry to the film. Chinese authorities do not provide reasons to Hollywood studios when they reject their movies, the source said. The government in Beijing has censored online images of Winnie the Pooh after some opponents likened the bear's appearance to President Xi Jinping and have used Pooh as a symbol of resistance. China, the world's second-largest film market, also limits the number of foreign-made films allowed into the country to 34 a year. It typically favors action-heavy blockbusters such as "Avengers: Infinity War" and "Black Panther," two of four Disney films that have played in China so far this year. In "Christopher Robin," the eponymous hero, now an adult, reunites with boyhood friend Winnie the Pooh and others such as Eeyore the donkey and Piglet.

5 MUSK CONSIDERS A PRIVATE TESLA, SHARES JUMP

Chief Executive Elon Musk said Tuesday he is considering taking Tesla Inc. private in what would be the largest deal of its type, moving the electric car maker out of the glare of Wall Street as it goes through a period of rapid growth under tight financial constraints. "Am considering taking Tesla private at $420. Funding secured," Musk said on Twitter. At $420 per share, a deal would be worth $72 billion overall. Musk did not disclose the source of the funding, although he said "investor support is confirmed." In a letter to Tesla employees published more than an hour later on the company's blog, Musk explained that such a move — over which no final decision had been made — would let Tesla "operate at its best, free from as much distraction and short-term thinking as possible." Tesla shares closed up 11 percent at $379.57, slightly below their all-time high. Asked on Twitter whether Musk would continue to be CEO under such a scenario, he replied there would be "no change." Musk has been under intense pressure this year to prove he can deliver on his promise to turn his money-losing company into a profitable higher-volume manufacturer.

Snapchat dysmorphia: An unhealthy quest for the perfect selfie

According to BU researchers, people are turning to plastic surgery to change their appearance to match filtered social media images.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

Snapchat dysmorphia is causing people to seek out plastic surgery in the quest for the perfect selfie. PIXABAY

Selfies, and the people who take lots of them, have long received criticism from those who think they reek of narcissism. Now a new set of critics has emerged: Medical experts argue those filters are leading to the rise of "Snapchat dysmorphia."

The term has been swirling around the internet since it was used in a recent article published in the medical journal JAMA Facial Plastic Surgery. Researchers at the Boston Medical Center and Boston University School of Medicine are warning people about the phenomenon and the rise in plastic surgery, but what is Snapchat dysmorphia?

Snapchat dysmorphia has patients "seeking out cosmetic surgery to look like filtered versions of themselves … with fuller lips, bigger eyes or a thinner nose," according to the JAMA article.

Just as celebrities and models have long set a standard for beauty, affecting those who wish to change how they look, Snapchat filters and features like Facetune — meant to smooth out your perceived imperfections — are doing the same.

But as these filtered images become the norm, authors say, Snapchat dysmorphia is taking a toll on people's' self-esteem.

Snapchat dysmorphia is related to body dysmorphia, a mental illness in which people obsessively focus on what they see as flaws in their appearance. It affects up to 2.4 percent of the population, according to the Anxiety and Depression Association of America, and it's more than just not completely loving something about the way you look.

Like those with body dysmorphia who seek out plastic surgery, those with Snapchat dysmorphia are doing the same, according to the BU researchers.

The authors referenced studies that showed that teen girls who manipulated their photos were more concerned with their body appearance and that those with "dysmorphic body image" often seek out social media for validation on how attractive they are.

Snapchat dysphoria is also leading people to seek out plastic surgery so that they look better in their selfies specifically. Research has found that 55 percent of plastic surgeons report seeing patients who go under the knife in order to approve their appearance in selfies — up from 42 percent in 2015.

Factors like angling your phone higher or finding the best light may actually lead you to be unhappy with your regular appearance, according to the researchers. "The angle and close distance at which selfies are taken may distort facial dimensions and lead to dissatisfaction," they wrote.

This is influencing the type of plastic surgery people choose. Before selfies skyrocketed in popularity, researchers say, the most common reason for those seeking rhinoplasty, aka a nose job, was because someone wanted to reduce the hump on the bridge of their nose.

Now the most common reason is because people are seeking "nasal and facial" symmetry, per the paper. Requests for hair transplants and eyelid surgical procedures have also increased.

But experts say altering your appearance isn't the best path. A filtered selfie is an "unattainable look," and wanting to make that come to life off of their screen is "blurring the line of reality and fantasy for these patients."

Alyssa Milano talks 'Insatiable' and the challenges of dark comedy

The "Charmed" actress reflects on her expansive television career and what the future holds.

ANDREW HUSBAND
letters@metro.us

In the controversial new Netflix series "Insatiable," Alyssa Milano plays Coralee, a would-be socialite who finds herself in the crosshairs of a vengeful girl played by Debby Ryan. Fans more familiar with her work in "Charmed" may think it a departure, but with credits as varied as "Who's the Boss?" and "My Name Is Earl," Milano's acting resume is ripe for a show precisely like this.

"It's something that I really enjoy doing. I find it to be much more of a challenge to do comedy, and to be able to find comedy within a character," she explains. "I've been acting now for 35 years, so I look for things that I feel will challenge me. It's also a big part of who I am as a person."

The 45-year-old performer ties her desire to do comedy, especially the dark comedy espoused by "Insatiable," to her #MeToo and Equal Rights Amendment activism as well.

"I think we've all experienced a tragedy that has been relieved by the giggles at some point in our lives. I look at it as a nervous-system reboot," says Milano. "I think that this show's comedy, and comedy across the board, really stems from a nervous system reboot. It can be so dark, and we are touching on such important thematic issues, that it needs to have those funny moments as a reprieve. Moments where you can breathe. These are the roles that I really dig playing. There's something attractive about playing things that surprise people."

She goes on to compare working on "Insatiable" with her recent experience on "Wet Hot American Summer: 10 Years Later," in which she played the seemingly murderous nanny Renata. Milano's comparison, of course, rests on both series' commitment to dark comedy, but it also ties to the "safety net" their respective creators employ for the cast.

"'Insatiable' was great because I was able to take risks. Lauren Gussis was such an incredible safety net, and so was David Wain on 'Wet Hot,'" she says. "You can look at people David and Michael Ian Black and Adam Scott and be too scared to be funny, but what all great comedy showrunners and directors have in common is an ability to make you feel like you're the funniest person in the room. That safety net really enables you to take more risks. That's what David was able to do for me with 'Wet Hot,' and what Lauren was able to do with 'Insatiable.'

"Coralee can definitely straddle that line of being over the top," adds Milano, "and I think that at my best, there are moments where I succeeded and moments where I didn't. Either way, Lauren was always there. She and the 'Insatiable' team were always there to help me ground Coralee. As long as you can feel that groundedness, then it's possible to make a character like Coralee believable in a sea of madness."

How this Boston chef handles managing three restaurants

Running one restaurant is hard enough, but what about three? For this Boston chef, multitasking and managing a trio of hotspots has become second nature.

As the executive chef for Brownstone, Clery's and Dillion's, Kelly Snogles always has a full plate but somehow finds time to give each venture his all. Thankfully, he has nearly two decades of restaurant experience to rely on, which comes in handy when trying to craft unique menus for each location.

"It started out as one," chef Kelly tells Metro. "One became two and two became three. I've done three for the last three years now."

Chef Kelly Snogles
PROVIDED

It took a lot of hard work to reach the helm of three restaurants for the Glynn Hospitality Group. The New York native has tried his hand at nearly every position in the culinary industry the years, from dishwasher to line cook. Kelly began his food journey as a teen when his parents made him get a job after catching him smoking. "My parents were like, 'Well, if you want to smoke cigarettes like a big man, you can get a job like a big man.'"

After bouncing around the New York area, Kelly shipped up to Boston in his 20s, landing a spot with Glynn on just his third day in the city. The relationship has lasted for nearly 10 years.

As for how Kelly handles managing three spots every day, he admits it takes a lot of effort. "I employ a system for all the boxes I have to check everyday.

"We use the terminology around here that I'm like Mommy," he adds. "When Mommy's here, everything's OK because I'm just here to deal with it. The minute I'm not here, things start to unravel pretty quick. Luckily I have other managers around."

Over the years, Kelly has learned to rely more and more on his team members. While managing people can get difficult, he says the key to keeping things in line is to trust the people you work with.

"You have to get work done through other people and you have to rely on them," he says. "If it's not done exactly how you want it, you have to take every opportunity and turn it into a teaching moment." MATT JUUL

Sports gambling boom is here

Online betting sites were introduced this week.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

The sports-gambling boom is happening much faster than many believed it would since the Supreme Court ruled in May that legalization would be up to individual states instead of being restricted on a federal level.

Things are already up and running in New Jersey, Delaware and Mississippi, and New Jersey was the first to roll out online sports betting. DraftKings, through a partnership with Resorts Casino Hotel, launched the first legal online sports-betting platform outside of Nevada this week. All of the future online sites must be partnered with physical sports books within a state with legal gambling.

For people outside states with legal sports betting thinking that they could somehow hack their way onto one of these sites, the early returns are that the sites are already very much secured.

"It's creepy how well they can locate you," said sports business and gaming analyst John Brennan, of USBets.com. "They can thank all the online-poker and online-casino people. All the experimentation with deposits and withdrawals — it's paid off for them. If you're say, driving in your car across the New Jersey border into Pennsylvania the [online betting website] will ping you and shut you down as soon as you cross state lines."

Interestingly, Brennan believes that the rise of online sports betting will not spell doom for off-shore sports gambling web sites.

"The thing is, the odds are often much better on off-shore sites," Brennan said. "Plus there are people who are used to playing the off-shore sites. The problem with a lot of these new sports books opening up are that the odds for winning are really poor. So I don't think the neighborhood bookie is going away."

Bettors place wagers at the Westgate Las Vegas Resort and Casino. Sports books like this are already being introduced on the East Coast. GETTY IMAGES

NBA affiliation

The NBA has been the first major pro sports league in the United States to fully embrace betting on games and last week it announced a deal with MGM, the first of its kind. MGM will pay the NBA for data to use in determining outcomes of certain bets and MGM will be an "official casino partner" for the league.

"That was one of the most unusual press conferences I've ever covered," Brennan said of the announcement last week in Manhattan. "MGM is essentially paying for the right to use NBA logos. For instance in Las Vegas — when you bet you bet on Cleveland versus Detroit, it's city versus city. Now you'll see (Cavaliers versus Pistons). Honestly, I don't know if that matters to the gambler."

East Coast expansion

MGM has been at the forefront of expansion lately as it relates to sports gambling. It bought Empire City Casino and Yonkers Raceway in New York right after the Supreme Court ruling, and MGM Springfield (Massachusetts) is opening later this month. The anticipation is that sports betting will be legalized in the states of New York and Massachusetts by the end of 2019.

"There likely won't be much movement in New York until next spring with all the political infighting right now. Plus they're dealing with the Native American casinos," Brennan said. "Massachusetts is not exactly a leader to get it right now but I think they will in 2019 or 2020 because of the acceptance of the casino culture. And in Pennsylvania the taxes are just really high. It will depend on how eager some operators will be to get into that market."

The gaming board in Pennsylvania is expected to act on another package of sports betting regulations, including prop bets, on Aug. 15.

Actor and Boston sports fan Mark Wahlberg placed a "hefty" bet on the Patriots to win the 2019 Super Bowl at William Hill Sports Book in Atlantic City in June. GETTY IMAGES

Aries Refuse to let someone's emotional tactics interfere with your progress. If you stay focused on what's important to you, you will reach your goal. Physical improvements will energize you.

Taurus Show you care and live up to your promises. What you do will make a difference. Don't rely on someone who talks big but does little. Anger is a waste of time.

Gemini Taking short trips, holding meetings and schmoozing with colleagues will help you round up support and allies who are willing to pitch in and help. Personal gains will require discipline.

Cancer Emotional domestic matters will surface and should be handled with restraint. Overreacting or being stubborn will only build a bigger wedge between you and a loved one.

Leo Personal improvements and spiritual growth will have an impact on the way you live and what you are willing to put up with. Plan your lifestyle to suit your emotional needs.

Virgo Step into the future and bring about the changes that will separate you from any competition you face. A change will help you put your financial and personal lives in perspective.

Libra Face your feelings and size up your options. Making a difference will require empathy, diplomacy and personal awareness. Protect your rights, assets and future.

Scorpio Traveling, attending meetings and expressing your concerns and ideas will be enlightening. Finding out exactly where you stand will make whatever choice you are given much easier.

Sagittarius Take pleasure in spending time with people who inspire and motivate you to be your best. Updating your appearance or the way you present what you have to offer will pay off.

Capricorn Don't let anyone interfere with the changes you need to make. Make adjustments at home that will lower your expenses. A personal sacrifice may be required.

Aquarius Listen to what others have to say, and consider the best way to fit in without being compromised financially, emotionally or otherwise. Concentrate on personal improvements. Invest in you.

Pisces Shopping for something special or planning a celebration with someone you love is favored. A change you make will improve your reputation, position or status. Apply for a better job. EUGENIA LAST
